Vātūlanāthasūtras with The Vritti of Anantas'aktipadāchārya.

FOREWORD.

The Sūtras of Vātūlanātha with the Vritti of Anantas'aktipāda form the present volume of the Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies.

They are thirteen in number and give a summary description of the Sāhasa Inspiration which means an 'unexpected happening'. The latter is the highest state of inspiration which takes place, when the spiritual seer, by chance, throws a kind glance on or extends his helping hand to the devotee.

Sāhasa is also known as Anupāya and stands in close relation to the Shāmbhavopāya which may be summed up in the following stanza:—

“मत्त एवोदितमिदं मय्येव प्रतिबिम्बितम् ।

मदभिन्नमिदं चेति.....,, ,”

“This objectivity has sprung from me, is reflected in me, and is not separate from me.” (Tantr. III Ahnika, Verse 280).

Nothing is specially known about the author of the Sūtras. The available mass of the Shaiva literature (from 9th to 12th century A. D.) alludes niether to them nor to their author. Hence the probable date of the author may be found somewhere after the 12th century A. D.

The Vritti is from the pen of one Anantas'aktipāda who asserts therein that the Sūtras have emanated from the mouth of Yoginīs when they took Vātūlanātha into their favour. The glossator seems to have commented also upon the Bahurūpagarbhasotra which is one of the devotional books of Śaivas.

Edition of the present number is based on the collation of the following manuscripts :—

- A. Very old manuscript. Belongs to M. M. Pandit Mukund Ram Sastri, late Officer-in-charge of this Department. Śāradā character and written on country paper. About 150 years old. Size $\frac{1}{2}$ foolscap. Correct and complete.
- B. About 50 years old. Correct. Belongs to Rājānaka Mehes'vara of this Department. Śāradā character. Written on Kashmiri paper. Size $\frac{1}{3}$ foolscap. Complete.
- C. Belongs to Swāmī Rishi Kaul Sāhib of Kharayar, Srinagar, Kashmir. Size oblong. Paper Kashmiri. About 75 years old. Correct and complete.

I have appended to the text an English translation which, I hope, will prove useful to the students of Śaivism. Some of the technicalities have also been explained in the notes, at the bottom of the translation portion, which also will be of great help for understanding the generalities of the Sāhasa aspect of Śaivism.

Before closing this little foreword, I feel it obligatory to express my thanks to the Departmental Pandits—especially to Rājānaka Mahes'vara who has cleared up many a moot point for me—for their assistance in bringing out this book.

VĀTŪLANĀTHASUTRAS WITH VṚTTI.

An English Translation.

I bow to that pre-eminent *Sāhasa inspiration which is realisable through the instructions from the mouth of the teachers, which constitutes the changeless stage of the vacuum and the trans-vacuum brought forth by the force of the unifying formation, which is the essence of the indeclinable knowledge, and which shines everywhere through the discernment of the Khechāra.† (1)

May that Unborn and Indefinable Being be victorious, Who is identical in nature with the ether of the transcendental consciousness, Who has no special location and Who is both graded and gradeless, being beyond the purview of all things ! (2)

I salute that which has come out of the ocean of glorious Vātūlanātha's heart and which is untrammelled by the limitations of the adorable, the adorer and the adoration ; (3)

Sāhasa* literally means an unexpected happening. It, therefore, stands, from the S'āivaistic point of view, for the highest state of inspiration which needs no preliminary preparation and which is said often to take place when a spiritual seer, by chance, happens to throw a kind glance on or extend his helping hand to the devotee.

†Khechāra denotes the man who has made a remarkable progress in the spiritual realm and has, as a result thereof, occupied that state in which one always lives and moves in the ether of consciousness.

Wherewith I remain unaffected in this world, taking my stand in the great ether, although I am always placed in the midst of all (mental) operations. (4)

I offer my worship to that transcendental which is novel, uninspirational, touchless and unlocalised and which unifies all synthetic and analytic processes of consciousness. (5)

Here a certain man undertakes a good gloss on the sūtras emanated from the yoginīs' mouth, which assumes grandness all the more owing to the treatment of the supreme principle. (6)

Here, in this treatise, the presiding deities of the monasteries instruct glorious Introduction. Vātulanātha, in the form of the sūtras, regarding the indefinable universal supreme principal, which is not subject to the defilement of order or disorder, existence or non-existence, truth or falsity, multiplicity or unity, thoughtfulness or thoughtlessness, and emanation or absorption, in the light of the realisation of the thirteen theories which are important for their sacred secret, after having fully explained the inexpressible tradition of Uts'ushmapāda which is far superior to all the theories beginning with those of the six philosophic systems and the four revelations and ending with that of melāpa.*

Melāpa* means the union of the perceiver and the perceived.

Text Sūtra 1.

The real nature is acquired by the firm stay in the pre-eminent sāhasa.

Gloss.—The esoteric meaning of the above Esoteric is that the acquisition of the explanation. real nature, i. e. attainment of the consciousness which is, being beyond all imaginations, inartificial, universal, transcendental, waveless, limitless, unlocalised and touchless, takes place somewhere, sometime, unexpectedly by the firm stay in the pre-eminent sāhasa, i. e. by the firm entry into the great checkless vacuity through the unification of all the synthetic and analytic conscious processes, preceded by the full development of the supreme sound drowning (all other sounds) and very very deep.
 Acquisition of the real nature falls to the lot of some such person as is wholly under the influence of the undominated inspiration quicker than the quick and as is fixed in his own real nature.
 Immersion by the firm stay in the pre-eminent sāhasa is attainable by the method explained above and to be referred to later on.—Sū. 1.

Context.—After explaining the tradition of the lofty sāhasa theory which refers to the unexpected realisation of the universal real nature standing beyond all things, the deities describe how all operations are simultaneously unified therein.

Text Sūtra 2.

The flow of operations (becomes) all of a sudden saturated, as it were, with the acquisition of that.

Gloss.—The flow, i. e. the abundant streaming, i. e. the perpetual and unfailing entry in that, of the operations, which are identical both with the rays of the eye, etc. and with appetite and aversion, etc., (becomes) simultaneously, i. e. at one time, in no orderly way, with the total transgression of the arrangement of the order, saturated with the acquisition of that, i. e. touched or assimilated to its own nature by the acquisition of the real nature which is obtainable by the order of entry in the forecited state of lofty sāhasa, which, in nature, is completely swallowing and standing beyond the calculations of time and no-time and which is exceedingly motionless.

Thus, by this way of expression is meant that all operations take their stand permanently in the stage of awakening, immediately after their identification with the state of the great vacuity which stands beyond all things and after the complete disappearance of their mutual differentiation.—Sū. 2.

Context.—After describing, in the above manner of expression, the secret tenet of simultaneous revelation, the deities proceed with the book-theory.

Text Sūtra 3.

Entry into the great vacuity results from the bursting open of the two boards.

Gloss—The same attainment of the supreme stage is here being discussed in detail as was referred to by the venerated sage Gandhamādana in the circumstance of his exhibition of the self-composed book, on the occasion he took glorious Nishkriyānandanātha into his personal favour.

The life current is always aflow as branching out into the seven rills finding their vent out in the order of the seven cavities. The same in its full swing represents the upper board. When flowing through the channel of the two cavities, it is called the exhaling breath and constitutes the lower board. Thus, in both the ways, the life-breath is coiled by the power of the five senses and shares the functions of a five-hooded serpent.

After opening its two coils of waking and sleeping, i. e. after removing their knot, the centrally situate life-breath (reveals itself) by the opening of the two boards or by cutting asunder the inhaling and the exhaling breaths. The centrally situate life-breath is akin, in nature, to the great vacuity, is immune from the theoretical stages of kula and akula (immanentalism and transcendentalism). It is indescribable, supremely manifest, indestructible and absolutely devoid of the notion of the knowable and the knower. It is far above the categories of the coloured and the colourless, does not at all come within the province of touch or non-touch, and is metaphorically called by such terms as the lofty ether etc. Entrance therein means the state of unification through immersion in that. The state of unification, known as forming the highest teaching, manifests itself.—Sū. 3.

Context.—The above is the summary statement, in the manner referred to in the Mahānaya school, of that state which is inexpressible as being beyond the reach of all the S'āstric theories, which leads to the realisation of the highest teaching, which involves the entry in the waveless lofty ether occasioned by overcoming the idea of existence and non-existence represented by the two boards, which is not an outcome of any kind of obsession and which gives rise to the immersion in the great vacuity. Now follows the explanation of the fruit of isolation as identical with that and as resulting from the destruction of the pair.

Text Sūtra 4.

The firm stay in the universal consciousness is brought about by the destruction of the couple.

Gloss.—The five gross elements, beginning with the earth, have each their dualistic function as the perceived and the perceiver. Of these, the element of earth, as dominated by odour, is twofold by its appearance through anal opening and nose. The water, in which the taste preponderates, is twofold as the genital and tongue. The fire, which has form for its main characteristic, appears twofold as feet and eyes. The air, characterised fundamentally by touch, is twofold as skin and hands. The element of ether appears manifold as expressing itself in the two forms of vocal organ and ears and has sound for its main quality.

Or, earth and water stand for the enjoyable, fire and water for the enjoyer and ether stands between the two. It is variously divided as appearing in pores and the interior of all arteries. Or, four gross elements, from earth to air, are of the form of the enjoyable and ether of the enjoyer. The enjoyer always stands in the enjoyed, the enjoyment also appears perpetually in the enjoyer.

Thus, by the forecited method, each of the five gross elements, beginning with earth, is always abloom in its twofold glory. Or, each of them shines either as manifest or unmanifest i. e. externally or internally or as potential or developed. From the destruction, i. e. the annihilation of the pair seated in these five senses, follows the firm stay in the universal consciousness, i. e. right and undisturbed fixation of that consciousness which is universal. The universal consciousness has no room for the forms of either the analytic consciousness or the synthetic.

2nd explanation of the Couple.

Destruction of the couple leads to the universal consciousness.

Thus the reference here is to the universal consciousness as unknowable and as constituting the essence of the transcendental supreme unity. Its fixation, or unfailing attainment, falls to the lot of some fortunate persons in the way chalked out by the able teachers. The above, in brief, thus means that the identification with the unconditioned, formless and indefinable takes place by the entire evaporation of the pair of kula and kaula.—Sū. 4.

Context.—After having, in the way of the couple-theory, enunciated the firm stay in the supreme principle, as accruing from the destruction of the couple, the realisation of the union-theory is introduced.

Text Sūtra 5.

The great union arises from the unification of the siddhayoginīs.

Gloss.—The word siddhayoginīs, as standing for those who are both siddhās and yoginīs at once, means the presiding deities of the senses and the sense objects. Their union means the junction of both the perceived and the perceiver or their mutual embrace.

By their embrace, the rise of the great union, i. e. the visible manifestation of the great unification, takes place, always and everywhere, in the ether of the transcendental consciousness, on the destruction of the duality of subjectivity and objectivity.

Brief of the above.

Siddhayoginīs defined.

Rise of the great union.

The above sūtra implies that the entry into the supreme takes place everywhere Substance. by the annihilation of the dual idea of the knowable and the knower.—Sū. 5.

Context.—The yoginīs hint at the attainment of the transcendental stage by casting aside the three veils, after explaining the rise of the great union which always follows the destruction of the pair.

Text Sūtra 6.

The inexpressible stage appears on the abandonment of the three veils.

Gloss.—The word trikañchuka means the veil that is of three kinds, i. e.
 Three veils. bhāvika, bhautika, s'ūnya. Of these, the bhāvika stands for the tanmātrās from the sound to the egoism; bhautika for the earth and others; s'ūnya either for that which is motionless or for that which is identical with desire.

Or bhāvika means the externality as perceived
 Three veils again. such as jug; bhautika, the internality as the sense perception; and s'ūnya, the ether that is between the two. Or, bhāvika is said to be the creation as the dreaming state; bhautika, the existence as the waking state; and s'ūnya, the destruction as the dreamless state.

From the abandonment, or the throwing aside, of the trikañchuka, above referred Substance. to, takes place, i. e. results, the firm stay in the inexpressible stage, i. e. the unswerving stand in that transcendental unlocalised lofty ether which is nameless, being beyond the range of speech.—Sū. 6.

Context.—Thus, having explained the attainment of the forth state by casting aside the three veils, the yoginīs now describe how the glory of the primary sound alone is always in full play in all free and fluent vocal utterances.

Text Sūtra 7.

In all the manifestations of appearance and disappearance of the four forms of utterance, the sound alone glories.

Gloss.—First of all, the four forms of the speech are being explained. The first form is known as Parā. It, as being the great secondless unity and as identical with the manifestation of the first flutter which represents a slight movement in the free universally existing transcendental and waveless lofty ether, holds in itself the whole alphabet, as the white and yellow substance in the egg of a peacock does the arrangement of colours.

The same parā is called pas'yantī as identical with the seer when it assumes the form of the yet unstruck sound, is undifferentiated and possesses all the letters in their germinal state, as the seed of the banyan tree does the banyan.

It assumes the name of madhyamā when it adopts the stage of the buddhi indulging in the determination of series of ideas and holds the group of letters in itself, as the pod does the grains.

(3) Madhyamā.

It is called vaikharī when it strikes against the different vocal organs in their natural order such as heart, throat, palate, etc., produces the multiplicity like that in a verse of different letters and brings into manifestation all the phenomenal experiences of the world such as form. Thus, the four forms of speech flow on, incessantly and unopposed, from the stage of the universal consciousness.

(4) Vaikhari.

The appearance and disappearance of the above described four forms of utterance mean their creation and destruction. The manifestations of their appearance and disappearance are, always and incessantly, in play visibly or invisibly. In them the sound, i. e. the full development of the great sound, far beyond both the unstruck and the struck, shines, i. e. always knows its rise, without the effort of organs, in the lofty ether beyond the analytic and the synthetic forms of consciousness.

Appearance and disappearance of the four forms.

The substance of the above is that the sound alone uninterruptedly shines, in the order of the four forms of utterance without the loss of its intrinsic nature, in the process of uttering each letter from among the different groups of letters which are nothing else than the manifestation of the play of diversity.—

Sū. 7.

Context.—Thus, being put forth that the sound emanates and is in full play without any opposition in all times and climes according to the genetical order of the fourfold utterance, the description, that the supreme transcendental stage alone manifests on the enjoyment of the triple happiness, ensues.

Text Sūtra 8.

On the enjoyment of the triple happiness, the unfettered supreme Brahman of the involuntary and sudden appearance (comes to revelation).

Gloss.—The triple happiness is brought out in a degree according to the instructions received from the mouth of the teacher. On the enjoyment of the congenital triple happiness experienced in mūlādhāra, payodhara and ādhāra, the indefinable supreme Brahman, identical with the transcendental supreme reflective consciousness, begins to dawn always and unsettingly.

It is of involuntary and sudden appearance, i. e. comes into manifestation involuntarily. It is unfettered, i. e. released from the bondage of the wordly existence consisting in the appearance of the multiplicity. It is far above the nature of the Brahman both as calm and as diversified.

Revelation involuntary.

The same triple happiness is being discussed at length from the esoteric point of view. Mūlādhāra, as meaning the particular great sound coming into appearance as the first expression of the consciousness, is considered of the creative function, because it is the primary basis of all shades of consciousness, whether as multiplicity or unity. Payodhara stands for the same first flutter of consciousness, as it bears, i. e. causes to appear in existence, the form of the universal consciousness which appears as the support of all things and which is treated as milk from its all-nurturing quality. Payodhara, as giving manifestation to all things, is said to constitute the existential stage. Ādhāra stands for the destruction as representing the involutive consciousness, because it brings to an end all beings whether sentient or otherwise.

The esoteric significance runs to this effect that the fourth state called absolute dissolution appears uninterruptedly in the form of absolute unity on enjoying, i. e. on thinking internally by the entry into the inartificial etheric mudrā over, the happiness, i. e. the unified enjoyment of particular experiences proceeding from the above triad.—Sū. 8.

Context.—In the above sūtra, the tradition of the triple happiness theory is described in the way of the universal consciousness. Now, in the following, the realisation is elucidated from the theory of the four deities.

Text Sūtra 9.

Permanence of the immersion in the real self takes place for ever by the full development of the four deities.

Gloss.—The four deities are respectively called hunger, thirst, jealousy and meditation. Of these, the hunger alone is to be viewed as the final dissolution, as it is bent on swallowing all things. The thirst alone is to be considered as dissolution, because it dries all things. The jealousy forms the existential stage, as giving rise to the dualistic conception and as associated with the chain of the perceived and the perceiver. The meditation, as involving ideas and desires, is creation.

By the full development, i. e. by the complete manifestation as identical with the stream of the devouring consciousness, of the above four deities, permanence of one's own real self, i. e. fixed stay in the universal consciousness constituting the fifth stage, takes place always and at all times in the case of each of the above deities quadruplicated as creation, existence, dissolution and absorption. Sū. 9.

Context.—The above sūtra explains the tradition of the theory of the four deities. The following discusses the mystic significance of the wheel of the twelve currents.

Text Sūtra 10.

The play of the big rays follows the emanation of the twelve currents.

Gloss.—Twelve currents represent the two combinations of six things each. The first includes the mind and the five cognitive senses beginning with the ear. The second consists of the intellect and the five action-senses beginning with the vocal organ.

Emanation of the twelve currents means the outflow, without any known cause, of the devouring consciousness appearing as the transcendental undisturbed absolute freedom bordering on the utmost limitlessness.

By that outflow in each current, on the destruction of such manifestations as the sentient or otherwise, the play, with its eternally expansive nature, takes place, indestructibly everywhere and always, of the big rays, i. e. the big ranges of consciousness, identical with creation, existence, dissolution, absorption and unification. This is the meaning of the above important sūtra.—Sū. 10.

Context.—Thus having, according to the view of the emanation of the twelve currents, described the entry into the state of freedom which is always within the reach without any effort, the deities now state the tradition of the five functions.

Text Sūtra 11.

On the full play of the five functions, the ungraded inspiration takes place.

Gloss.—The five functions are respectively called anās'ritā, avadhūtā, unmattā, sarvabhakshyā and mahāvyāpikā. The emanation of them means the expansive glory beaming forth from within the group of defined or undefined powers. On the occurrence thereof, appears the ungraded inspiration, i. e. the transcendental inspiration which remains as such but has no grades such as āṇava,* s'ākta† and s'āmbhava.‡

The five functions will now be detailed in their order. The anās'ritā is, as supportless, akin to the lofty ether and is always ready and goes out, through the cavity of the ear, to swallow all its own objects. Avadhūtā is awake, at random, to assimilate, through the power of the eyes moving everywhere, all those objects which are absorbed into it. Unmattā, being free like a lunatic, is remarkable for catching its objects without any reference of the acceptable

Āṇava* is that inspiration of Rudras'akti which is attainable by utterance, conscious mental discipline (karana), contemplation, incantation and the bodily centres.

†S'ākta is the name of that stage which is obtainable by the contemplation, through the mind, on the object of meditation accompanied by utterance.

‡S'āmbhava indicates the state which is produced by the deep and penetrative spiritual insight involving absolutely no mental concentration on any particular object.

and the avoidable. Sarvabhakshyā, as destined habitually to gormandise all eatables, engages itself in devouring all its own objects. Mahāvvyāpikā also springs into existence, as all-pervasive, to assimilate all touches through the channel of skin. This is the genesis of the five functions. Sū. 11.

Context.—After describing the theory of the ever existing functions, the deities now explain the system of merit-and-demerit nullification resulting from the fixed grasp of the light of the universal supreme knowledge.

Text Sūtra 12.

Release from merit and demerit accompanies the inspiration of the great enlightenment.

Gloss.—The great enlightenment is realised by the great teachers. It is free from the defilement of desires and ideas such as the knower, the knowledge and the knowable. It is the manifestation of that stage which is unlocalised and transcendental and which is possessed of ceaseless tranquillity. It is of the form of the highest knowledge, as being beyond the range of order or disorder.

The inspiration of that means to appear in identity therewith perpetually, in an unswerving manner, with the entire negligence of acceptance or otherwise, without any change in the circumstances and without any effort. Out of that inspiration of the great enlightenment, comes about the release, i. e. separation from merit or demerit, i. e. the virtuous and vicious actions capable of yielding their respective consequences.

Great liberation. This great liberation is superior to both the bondage and the release and is always at hand, even in the land of the living, like an āmalaka on the palm of the hand, to a heroic man of extraordinary birth, who, although in life, has had the enjoyment of the inartificial happiness of experiences to satiation.—
Sū. 12.

Context.—After explaining the tradition of the theory relating to the complete domination of merit and demerit, preceded by the attainment of the real nature, the deities now commence the exposition of the theory of the absolute silence based on the ground of the sound.

Text Sūtra 13.

The attainment of the unity takes place, through the acquisition of the mudrā of great wonderment, by virtue of the concentration on the real nature.

Gloss.—The force of the concentration on the real nature is, here, being discussed a bit in the way of the tradition received from the mouth of the spiritual teacher. Akathana explained. Akathana means the discussion of the oral transmission of the theory of the a sound which passes through the four stages as hata, anāhata, anāhatahata, anāhatahatottirṇa.

Of them, the hata is taken in hand at first.

(a) Hata. It is so called, because it strikes against the different organs, such as heart, throat, palate, etc. It covers the whole alphabet from a to ha and, as such, manifests multiple objects of experience.

(b) Anāhata. Anāhata stands for that enlargement of the lofty sound which is based primarily on the a sound, which, as interchangeable with madhyamā, is allied to the sound of a (musical) string. Its range, seemingly, extends up to the border of the throat cavity.

(c) Anāhatahata. Anāhatahata emanates as forming the basis of the two. It is unstruck and is perceptible only when the ear, with its self-centred tympanum, is closed. It is also struck as it comes in touch with the body, which, in essence, represents all categories, when reaching the ether situated in the middle of each ear. It is hence called anāhatahata.

(d) Anāhatahatottirṇa. Anāhatahatottirṇa implies the sound which glories in the supreme stage of freedom in which ideation is totally absent and which forms the first expression, in a slight shake, of the great energy. This sound is not subject to increase or decrease in its volume, is ever expanded, is un-touchable and manifests as the unutterable great incantation.

Similarly, the anāhatahatottirṇa, which is represented in the form of triangular nut, stands for the fourth state and is of the nature of Raudrī.*

Anāhatahata, represented in the form of the vowelless consonant constituting the face of α , stands for the dreamless state and is of the nature of Vāmā.

Anāhata stands for the dreaming state, being identical with that which is described in the scripture as Ambikā-S'akti, and which is represented in the arm of α .

Hata stands for the waking state and is identical with Jyeshthā symbolised by a form of the weapon.

Akathanakathana means the traditionally received scientific explanation of the initial letter of the Sanskr̥ta alphabet and is of the fourfold nature as described above.

The force of that means the strength, as identical with the full manifestation of the sound called anāhatahatottirṇa, finding its expression through the preliminary forms as hata, etc. In other words, akathanakathā means the concentration, through the gradual reflection, upon the universal reality which is beyond the range of speech. This concentration constitutes the vigour, i. e. essence of the inartificial glory.

The reflection on that universal reality is here being a little detailed. Reflection on universal reality. Whatever the worthy adept, who has totally destroyed his belief in the life-breath, *puryaśṭaka and s'ūnyapramātā,† as his own self and who is therefore firmly seated in the stage of the ungraded and all-expanding consciousness, witnesses, on the realisation of his own all-pervasive real nature, through the power of his vision of the supreme vacuity which is full of undisturbed bliss and beautiful on account of his absolute indifference towards particular actions and their fruit, all that always appears to him as identical with supreme consciousness. All this is doubtless.

Another explanation. The akathanakathābala is being explained in another way. The methodical treatment of the goal is resorted to in all other philosophic schools, such as the six systems, the four revelations, and the union system, with reference to the wheel of deities some of which are essential and some otherwise for a particular form of adoration. Whereas, in this school, there is no utility for the adorable, the adorer and the adoration. The eternally existing glory of the big rays alone, as identical with the transcendental reality, is abloom everywhere and always, according to the way of the oral tradition received from the mouth of the blessed sages, such as glorious Vātūlanātha and others.

*Five sense-objects, mind, intellect and egoism.

†Believer in the absolute existence of vacuity.

By virtue of the above referred to akathana-kathābala, takes place the attainment of the great wonderment. This is as regards the construction of the sūtra.

Mahāvismaya means the entry into the reality by rising superior to all (ceremonial) laws and stands for that stage in which the vanity of the egoism, whether limited or unlimited is totally extinct. The mahāvismaya may mean, besides this, the sudden entry into the ceaseless and unopposed Khechara stage by the total neglect of mieum tieum. It is called mudrā because it covers all the mudrās as their final destination. It is identical with the immersion in the stage of absolute silence.

By means of that mudrā, dawns khasvaratā which means the state of unity as discussed in the thirteen theories. The unity is called khasvara because it embraces even that state where no categories are known to exist.

This oral tradition, as explained in the sūtras, of the unity of the transcendental state, was revealed by the monastic deities to some avadhūta, on the occasion of his attainment of great union, by initiating him into the realisation of the thirteen theories, forming the brief résumé of the six systems of philosophy, the four revelations and all schools of union. This little gloss on the same was undertaken for the understanding of the righteous folk.

A certain gentleman, released from the dualistic delusion of the worldly multiplicity, has beautifully and rightly exposed this supreme transcendental secret, which is beyond the range of speech, in consequence of the sudden outburst of the glory of unlimited supreme reality proceeding from the evolution of consciousness.
